Administrative law is an independent subdivision of law that regulates social relations. It includes social relations that arise during public administration and are subject to ensuring the rights and freedoms, the interests of society and the state, and the implementation of the management functions of the state and local self-government in socio-economic, administrative, and political spheres.

Administrative law regulates the activities of organizational power structures, local self-government, state and non-state enterprises, institutions, and organizations. It is a mandatory tool for exercising state executive power through state administration. Norms of administrative law are formed under the influence of civil, labor, family, and other branches of law.

Ukraine announced a course to build a social and legal state and bring public institutions to the requirements of the European Union. Particular attention is paid to the organization of the functioning of the public authority system per international standards in all spheres of public life. At the same time, the basis of all public authorities' actions in Ukraine and in all states is administrative activity, which consists of many administrative proceedings.

From the beginning of the development of administrative law, it began to develop as the right of management, which must be based on the requirements of the law, taking into account the population's interests, and it cannot be exercised at the discretion of officials. The science of administrative law should be aimed at obtaining, updating, and deepening knowledge about legal relations between the subjects of administrative legal relations and the legal consequences of such relations [1].

The very exercise of power by public authorities is an administrative activity. At the same time, analysis and theoretical substantiation of the administrative action of public authorities in Ukraine were carried out episodically [2].

Recently, certain misunderstandings have arisen in the system of social relations regulation, which affect the protection of the rights and freedoms of individuals and legal entities and, in some cases, violate constitutional rights and freedoms.

In the scientific literature today, the division of administrative proceedings carried out by state authorities into conflict and non-conflict is determined. At the same time, the number of administrative proceedings is constantly increasing.

Meanwhile, the imperfection of the mechanism of administrative and legal regulation of administrative proceedings leads to problems in the activities of state authorities and local self-government bodies, which primarily carry out administrative proceedings [3].

With proper administrative and legal regulation of the structure of administrative proceedings and a theoretical study of the entire system of administrative proceedings, it is possible to develop the main components of the domestic economy effectively.

In addition, improving the legal basis of the activity of entities that carry out administrative proceedings will contribute to advancing the system of legal education of citizens. This applies to conflicting administrative proceedings because citizens who do not comply with the established rules and in respect of whom appropriate protocols on offenses are drawn up must feel the certainty of punishment. For this, it is necessary to develop proper stereotypes of administrative conflict proceedings. The variety of features of administrative-legal legal relations and activities of state authorities also requires improvement of their actions in non-conflictual administrative proceedings.

In connection with the above, there was an objective need for a comprehensive study of administrative proceedings, both conflict and non-conflict and a clear definition of such concepts as: «conflict administrative proceedings,» «non-conflict administrative proceedings,» «subjects of administrative proceedings,» « principles of conflict and non-conflict administrative proceedings» [4].

Issues regarding conflicting administrative-procedural relations and the need to bring administrative legislation into line with world standards also require resolution.

The author will provide a scientific study in which he aims, based on the analysis of the norms of administrative legislation, international legal acts, and theoretical and applied research, to determine the essence and content of administrative proceedings in Ukraine, to identify the shortcomings of its legislative regulation and to propose scientifically based suggestions and recommendations for its improvement.

Thus, the author proposed and provided the author's definition of conflict and non-conflict proceedings that arise, develop, and terminate based on actual or potential legal facts regarding the satisfaction of the interests of individuals and legal entities, as well as the protection of the rights and freedoms of citizens.

Also, the author determined that administrative proceedings ensure the functioning of the vast majority of legal relations in society, while non-conflictual administrative proceedings predominate, and conflict proceedings contribute in most cases to educational work regarding compliance with established norms and rules.
