Positioning Ukraine within the dynamic framework of the ‘Tartu – Tartus’ civilisational frontier, the authors of the monograph offer a timely, systematic analysis of the nation’s evolving geostrategic and security positioning in Europe during and after the Russo-Ukrainian War. Authored by leading researchers in cooperation with the ‘Ukraine-XXI’ Centre for Strategic Communications at Yuriy Fedkovych Chernivtsi National University alongside scholars from across Ukrainian higher education institutions, this monograph bridges critical theoretical insights and practical policy applications.

The findings offer both theoretical and practical significance, making them invaluable for humanities scholars, policymakers, and security practitioners, and providing essential reading for professional training in international relations, political science, and intercultural communication.

Each author bears individual responsibility for the academic content and overall quality of their contribution.
